

Three Schools in New York Archdiocese among Top 50 Catholic High Schools named for 2005

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich. (Sept. 8, 2005) –The Catholic High School Honor Roll today announced the second annual selection of its best 50 secondary schools in America. Building on the success of last year’s program, this year’s Honor Roll will continue to serve as an invaluable resource for students, parents and benefactors. By recognizing the nation’s top 50 high schools, the Honor Roll promotes quality Catholic secondary education.

Among this year’s top 50 is Katonah’s The Montfort Academy, the Bronx’s All Hallows Academy, and Somers’s John F. Kennedy Catholic High School. All three schools fall within the borders of the Archdiocese of New York, which came as good news to Archbishop Edward Cardinal Egan. Responding to news of this distinct honor, Cardinal Egan released the following statement:

“To have three of the Catholic high schools in the Archdiocese of New York judged to be among the fifty best Catholic high schools in the nation affirms the quality of the Catholic education and formation provided throughout all of our secondary schools here in New York. All Hallows High School, Kennedy Catholic High School, and The Montfort Academy serve the needs of very different student populations, using the skills, talents, and vision of the administrators and their faculties. As Archbishop of New York, I am delighted to learn that these schools have demonstrated outstanding leadership in programs that promote Catholic identity as well as excellent academics and civic education. Permit me to congratulate everyone involved for their dedication to our young people whose parents have chosen and sacrificed to send their sons and daughters to Catholic high school.”

More than half of the Honor Roll schools are repeat performers from last year. Honorees include co-ed, male and female schools, and ranged from the 24-student Holy Rosary Academy in Anchorage, Alaska, to St. Thomas Aquinas High School in Fort Lauderdale, Florida with more than 2,100 students. The state of Florida led the way with seven schools selected, followed by Texas and New York (6 each) and Pennsylvania and Illinois (5 each). In all, schools from 21 states made the Honor Roll. In addition to the Top 50 list, the Honor Roll also published the top 20 finalists in three categories that are important to overall excellence: academics, Catholic identity, and civic education. Advisory board member Father Bernard O’Connor, president of De Sales University, said the Honor Roll provides a valuable service. “It is important to highlight the accomplishments of schools that are contributing in exemplary ways to the moral and intellectual formation their students,” he said.

The primary goal of the Honor Roll is to encourage schools to educate students as effectively as possible, in a way that integrates Catholic faith and prepares students for active engagement with the world. By supporting this constructive competition, the Honor Roll provides insight into the character of Catholic secondary education and calls everyone to improve the academic and spiritual formation given to America's youth. In promoting rigorous educations, the Honor Roll desires to better prepare students for fruitful vocations in politics, business, and the Church.

Strength in each of the three areas—academics, Catholic identity, and civic education—was key to placing on the Honor Roll, according to the project's director, Dr. Kevin Schmiesing. "It is encouraging to see so many outstanding examples of Catholic education," he said. "Though the schools represent a diverse array of types—including Christian Brothers, Franciscan, Legionary, diocesan and independent—what they have in common is a commitment to excellence in the areas that we examine."

The Catholic High School Honor Roll is an independent project of the Acton Institute for the Study of Religion & Liberty, an international research and educational organization based in Grand Rapids, Mich. The Honor Roll was produced in consultation with a national advisory board comprised of Catholic college presidents and noted Catholic scholars. For more on Acton, please go to www.acton.org
